

Rudolf Steiner, November 27, 1910

"Knowledge and Immortality"
(Lecture not printed; "Beiträge zur Rudolf Steiner Gesamtausgabe" Nr. 98, Christmas 1987.)

"We have to exterminate with the root all fear and anxiety for that, which comes to mankind out of the future. How frightened are people nowadays for everything that lies in the future — especially at the hour of death.

Man has to develop resignation in all his feelings towards the future. He has to look with an absolute equanimity at everything that comes from the future. He should think: Whatever comes, comes to us through the wise guidance of the spiritual world."

— — —

Text handed down by Willem Zeylman van Emmichoven ("apparently by Rudolf Steiner" — p. 259-260 "Willem Zeylman van Emmichoven — an Inspiration for Anthroposophy" — Emanuel Zeylman — Forest Row, 2002)

"This is, what we must learn in our time: to live out of pure trust, without any security of existence, out of trust in the continually present help of the spiritual world. Truly, there is no other way."

